

Civilian Conservation Corps

James F. Justin Civilian Conservation Corps Museum

This site has a vast number of resources on the CCC, more than I had time to review. Includes a history, anecdotes exhibit, CCC biographies collection, a camp and project histories collection, a document exhibit, government records collection and links to other CCC related pages. Well worth the time if you are a CCC scholar or enthusiast.

<http://www.justinmuseum.com/famjustin/ccchis.html>

Information about CCC Camps in Florida

<http://fpsaa.org/traditions/fps-history>

<http://cccresources.blogspot.com/2011/03/ccc-state-by-state-florida.html>

http://www.ccclegacy.org/CCC_Camps_Florida.html

Civilian Conservation Corps and New England Ski Trails

CCC crews cleared trails for backcountry skiing, trails that are still popular today and still boosting the local economies. In this 2013 New York Times story, a travel writer gives a skier's view of these trails.

<http://www.nytimes.com/2013/02/17/travel/skiing-old-trails-of-the-new-deal.html>

Background and Founding of the 21st Century Conservation Service Corps

The 21st Century Conservation Service Corps (21CSC) was inspired by the CCC. This site provides background and history on 21CSC.

<http://www.nascc.org/impact/conservation/21st-century-conservation>

Current Website for 21st Century Conservation Service Corps

This site has more current information about 21CSC member organizations and conservation projects on the ground.

<http://21csc.org/>

CCC Art Detective Kathleen Duxbury

The Civilian Conservation Corps is best known for construction and conservation projects, but the corps also employed a few CCC Artist Enrollees, budding artists who worked in the camps and related parks painting landscapes and CCC activities. Kathleen Duxbury has been traveling extensively since 2005 seeking out CCC art in state and national parks and "hidden sites." She and her husband, Gardner, record their finds in photographs, including infrared photos.

In addition to her website <http://www.kathleenduxbury.com>

Duxbury writes a blog <http://newdealstories.com/>